The Pas-ta'ai Festival is a significant ritual of the Saisiyat, an indigenous community residing in Taiwan. __46__ The festival is a remembrance of both gratitude and atonement, as the Ta'ai people were killed by the Saisiyat for harassing their women.

The Pas-ta'ai Festival takes place during the tenth month on the lunar calendar every two years, and a grand ritual is held every ten years. __47__ One or two months before the ritual, the Saisiyat meet to determine the ritual time and prepare silver grass knots for the ritual. The ritual is held over the course of several days and nights. On the first day, the spirits of the short people are summoned in the early morning. __48__ Finally, people send off the spirits back to the wild. After the ritual, rewards and celebrations mark the completion.

__49__ First of all, when arriving at the ritual, be sure to get silver grass and bring it with you to ward off evil. Next, avoid disruptive behavior or rude language during the sacred ceremonies. In addition, before joining in the singing or dancing during the ritual, remember to ask for permission from the people involved.

The Pas-ta'ai Festival is a time of unity, cultural pride, and a strong connection to their ancestral roots for the Saisiyat. It is an opportunity for them to express their gratitude and atonement to the short people and remember their history and legends. As visitors to this sacred ritual, by respecting their customs and embracing their traditions, we can be a part of the enriching experience.

The culture of the Tao has many features that set this group of people apart from all of the other tribes in Taiwan. One particularly interesting feature is the Tao's metal helmets. No other tribe in Taiwan had the knowledge or material to make this type of helmet. According to Tao history, the material and know-how for making such helmets were brought over from the Philippines. It is thought that the Tao came to Taiwan from the Philippines around 800 years ago. Typically, the helmet has the shape of a cone, and it has holes for its wearer to see through because the helmet covers the face. Once a helmet is made, its owner brings it to the annual flying fish season celebrations. There he sprays some water from the sea on the helmet in the hope that he will catch lots of fish during the fishing season. He also rubs pig's blood on the helmet to make it stronger and more powerful.

know-how 技能知識

50. (M) What is the main purpose of the passage?
- (A) To trace the date of the Tao's first settlement.
- (B) To provide some specific facts about the Tao's metal helmets.
- (C) To explain why sea water is sprayed on the helmet once a helmet is made.
- (D) To distinguish the Tao from other indigenous tribes in Taiwan.
51. (M) Why does the owner of a Tao helmet rub pig's blood on the helmet?
- (A) To equip it with certain magic power.
- (B) To enhance its strength.
- (C) To pray for a good catch in the fishing season.
- (D) To avoid bad luck.
52. (D) What can be inferred from this passage?
- (A) The metal helmet is the only feature that distinguishes the Tao from other tribes in Taiwan.
- (B) If a Tao man does not wear a helmet, he will have a poor catch of flying fish.
- (C) Rubbing pig's blood on the helmet is nothing but a ridiculous superstition of the Tao.
- (D) The wearer of a helmet can see through because there are holes on the helmet.

In 1937, the Japanese army conquered Nanking, China, and the violent acts they committed were so extreme that the conquest came to be known as the Rape of Nanking. Hundreds of thousands of people sought protection in the Nanking Safety Zone (NSZ), which had been set up by foreign businessmen, doctors, and teachers. The head of the NSZ was John Rabe, a German businessman.

Rabe, who lived in Nanking, was a loyal member of the Nazi Party, even though he had not seen what was happening in Germany under Hitler. Therefore, when Japanese planes first began bombing the city, Rabe and his workers held up a giant Nazi flag above their heads. They did so hoping the Japanese pilots would spare their lives. After all, Germany and Japan were on the same side in the war. When the Japanese took control of Nanking, Rabe took in hundreds of Chinese people. Whenever Japanese soldiers came near, Rabe would show them the Nazi symbol as a warning to stay away.

Rabe has been credited with saving the lives of 200,000 people through his actions. Yet, it's strange to think that he probably could not have done it without the help of the Nazi symbol. These events show just how complicated history can be and that something associated with death can also have the power to save lives.

conquest 征服

53. (A) What is the passage mainly about?
- (A) A person who saved hundreds of thousands of innocent people.
 - (B) A historical event that changed the fate of Germany forever.
 - (C) A story that was never told until very recently.
 - (D) A businessman who fought to defend the rights of his fellow citizens.
54. (B) In the last paragraph, what can we infer about the author's viewpoint regarding the Nazi symbol?
- (A) The author probably thinks the symbol was useful in showing the Japanese army that Japan and Germany were on the same team.
 - (B) The author may think that the symbol has historical value and thus should be preserved.
 - (C) The author may praise Rabe's actions in saving people's lives but does not approve of his use of the Nazi symbol.
 - (D) The author probably thinks it's ironic that a symbol representing murder and death could also save the lives of hundreds of thousands.
55. (B) Where would this passage most likely appear?
- (A) In a booklet about Nazi history.
 - (B) In a magazine about historical figures.
 - (C) On an advertisement for Nanking tourism.
 - (D) On a website about Nazi concentration camps.
